Background

Jami Carpenter earned a bachelor's degree from the University of California at Berkeley and master's from the University of Nevada, Las Vegas. She was a teacher and counselor for the Clark County School District for almost thirty years, and taught in the graduate counseling programs at UNLV and the University of Phoenix.

While serving as president of the Southern Nevada School Counselors Association, Jami spoke at educational conferences across the country, and she has been a frequent guest on local television news programs regarding social and educational issues. In addition, Jami was executive producer and host of the Vegas PBS television show, Book Club, which featured interviews with local, national, and international authors.

Jami currently works as a freelance editor and ghostwriter. Further information can be found at www.redpengirl.com.
